The first one should only be used if you are copying the sample file and you don't want to end up with a file with incorrect SHA-1. At the top of the window is a box where you can copy and paste a label from a file to another file, which makes it easy to know which files came from which folder. In the first box, select the file you want to back up and click OK. Select your destination folder from the list, and it will create a backup of that file. If the file has not been moved to your machine before, it will start downloading the file to your local drive. When the download is complete, you can click the next button. If you want to continue to the next sample, click the next button again. For each sample, there is a button where you can select what label you want to apply to the sample. When you have finished recovering the sample, click the done button. Click the button that says preview the file.
