This is a requirement of our site, which will render much of the site unusable. All modern browsers, such as Internet Explorer, are required to support JavaScript. We also provide a high-performance port scanner, which is generally unreliable, but we'll keep it around as a reference tool for those times when something genuinely spectacular shows up on your router. If you think you've found a bug, please report it to us by sending an email to administrator at the most recent Freenode IRC channel, #osx10.8.pkgs. Thanks!

UPDATE 16/08/2010: Torrent of the 10.8 port scanner binary. We're not saying, the security is any better than this one, but it's an interesting port scanner in its own right. UPDATE

09/10/2010: Someone on our mailing list has been building a 10.8 port scanner in native assembly. It's available in Postscript format, if you happen to have a computer which needs it.

UPDATE 13/10/2010: It has been pointed out to us that there are a number of 10.8 dissectors available online. One is even based in OSX! We will endeavour to link to the best available resource on the topic. UPDATE 01/11/2010: It appears that the 10.8 binary has been
