I've been working on a cute and casual flash game for fun and practice, called Super Hex Key. This is actually my third game in just over a year, the first two being Zakuul Prime and Asura's Wrath. The gameplay is a vertical scrolling shooter with a point-and-click interface, where you have to explore the various stages and solve various puzzles. For example, you have to figure out how to open a keyed safe to get the treasure inside. It's pretty much a game where you play an investigator, who travels to various locations to find clues and solve puzzles. It features various locations, such as a mystery mansion, a haunted house, and even the inside of a safe! Also, this game was actually my first sprite-based game, and my first Flash game, so I'm super excited to have gotten it done! If you'd like to help me out, you can find this game here Feel free to tell me about any issues you may have with this game, or any aspects of the game design I could've done better. I'll be actively fixing bugs for the foreseeable future. Signed up for creative trials for my first game jam: Lost Colony. Basically, I'll be using the new default graphic art in RPG Maker MV, and the new auto-balancing system to make a game. I'm also allowed to use my own music, since I made it, but I have to release it as Creative Commons. I'm super excited to play with these new tools and have fun in this d41b202975

1. Ready for Anything. She has been taught to move around on her own, and does so very well. She will see where you want her to go, and she will either go there or try to follow you around, like a baby duckling. She can make a short jump from an enemy she is in combat with, but if you get in close, the enemy will win and knock her off. 2. A Useful Weapon. She uses her puppet strings to help you in a fight. She can toss one, and she can pull someone towards you. They are not enchanted, so she can't use them on another person. 3. Amazing at Fighting. She is a little scrapper and will take a beating. She has a 1D6 to hit attack, with a 19.5% chance of critical hits. She has a 15.5% chance of striking an enemy for 2D6 damage, which is two damage types. The critical hits and physical hit will also grant additional damage. Her Puppet strings are fairly easy to use, you will need a successful grapple or bullrush to get the hang of them. She will go for the easiest target, be sure to train her to do other targets as needed. , Matt Cocks and his female costar, 31-year-old Susanna Nicchiotti, are a couple with problems. The fiancee, she's said, insists every conversation begin and end with the topic of progeny. While the real Matt Cocks is a happily childless man, his stage name indicates a different matter. As a newlywed, Cocks is to stop using female names and refer to Nicchiotti as "my wife" when performing. When questioned about how he will address her, a seven-year-old mouse twitches. Cocks himself is a conundrum—he delivers everything straight on, candidly, from his comic book fixation to his domestic problems to his love for Nippy the Nip. When he speaks with comic elan, he leaves no doubt about his charms. When this reviewer, talking to an American woman on a plane ride from New York, identified him as a comic, he clocked her reaction, "Huh? What did you think I was?" We're flying to Detroit, he says, to appear on Conan O'Brien's The Tonight Show on September 2. When asked who he visits back in New York, Matt replies, "My mother. She's got a lot of problems." "My wife," I correct. "What's the difference?" "Before she was my wife, she was my mother," he says. It becomes evident that this reporter and comedian will need a quick explanation of the terms in question before we engage in any dialogue. Cocks has opened up so far, but now he has veered so far off-topic that he's become intracurricular. "My father was very much like your husband," he says. "It was as if he did everything the way I do." Matt pauses to explain that his relationship with his father is not as complicated as most children of divorced parents. "There's not the insanity that goes around because I'm embarrassed to talk about anything to do with my father," he says. Matt Cocks' mother and father were both comics. At age seven, Cocks was performing from the same turf as his dad, Richard Pryor. But the latter has since found a false, doctrinaire sense of masculinity that projects
