It appears that the image is loaded but somewhere along the process it stops loading the image. My route for uploading the image is: Route::post('/products/upload/', 'ProductsController@upload'); My image upload form is { { Form::open(array('url' => 'products/upload', 'files' => true, 'class' => 'form-horizontal')) } } And this is my controller method public function upload() { $file = Input::file('image'); // move image to directory $target = public_path().'/storage/app/photos/'; $file->move($target); return Redirect::to('/products')->withInput(); } A: You're taking this big file path and trying to use it in your redirect route. You should instead take the image file path: $target = Input::file('image')->move($target); Q: What are the downsides to using navigator.geolocation in a tablet app? I am currently developing a navigation app for Android, in which the user can search for a location. I am specifically interested in the location itself, and not necessarily a plot of where they are. Are there any particular downsides to using navigator.geolocation? A: I looked into this a while ago, but most of the concern seems to be that if you start using it heavily, it will begin to drain the battery. I'd say that if you're really concerned about battery, then just do a one-time start when the app is activated. When you want to use location on the fly, just query for it every now and then as needed. Evaluation of solubility characteristics of materials in oral cavity, gastrointestinal and renal fluids. A: Try this "" Work Fine "" import urllib2 # request the file request = urllib2.Request(file) # send the request opener = urllib2.build_opener() opener.addheaders = [('User-agent','spam')] f = opener.open(request) print f.read() Q: CSS avoid modal bottom overlap This is very similar to a question that has been asked before, however, I'd like to further explain this modal box, so I posted it a second time. The problem is that I can't really explain it, you might know, if you got an example to look at that is larger than the display area. Since the content is not big, you can see what I mean. What I would want to do is avoid the content of the modal being on top of the background image, which is the problem. If anyone got any idea how to solve this, it would be much appreciated. (And before you ask, I don't want to use JavaScript. I only need this on the desktop, so maybe there's a CSS-only solution.) A: There's a simple solution, but it does require Javascript to use: CSS only solution The code in the tag needs to have padding that's larger than the image itself. HTML CSS .content-div { position: absolute; top: 0; left: 0; bottom: 0; right: 0; background-image: url(...); background-size: cover; background-position: center; /* other stuff goes here */ } .content-div is a div that spans the entire screen and has no padding. This is the background image. It is positioned in the center of the screen, and it goes
