Using degenerate oligonucleotides based on the conserved region of LuxR proteins, two clones, vfvIR1 and vfvIR2, were isolated from a cosmid library of the luminescent marine bacterium Vibrio fischeri. vfvIR1 encodes a luxR gene, homologous to the V. cholerae luxR gene, whereas vfvIR2 encodes a newly identified peptide-binding protein. Expression of the genes was detected in all strains of V. fischeri tested. vfvIR1 was highly expressed in the early exponential growth phase (O.D. approximately 0.2), and was induced in stationary phase and reached a maximum of 10,000-fold induction. vfvIR2 protein expression was lower than vfvIR1, but was induced approximately 10,000-fold in stationary phase. vfvIR1 was closely related to the vciR1 gene of V. cholerae, but the vfvIR2 gene was different from any other bacterium tested. These results suggest that V. fischeri possesses three kinds of LuxR homologs: one peptide-binding protein, one AHL-binding protein, and one protein to which both might be bound.[A case of hyperamylasemia with duodenal ulcer]. A 72-year-old male was admitted to our hospital because of epigastralgia. He was diagnosed duodenal ulcer on gastroduodenoscopy performed on admission. His white blood cell count was 7,200/mm³, and his

► Green green set of icons with transparent background! ► Supports all windows 7 ► No crashQ: Move from the second Node into the first with DOM API I have an HTML Structure like this: Title 1 2 3 and I want to use the DOM API to change the position of the element using the moveTo() method. The problem here is that the moveTo() method needs a Node and an index parameter, but a Node is the Node that belongs to the first element in the HTML (the one that's inside the), and I don't know any other way to get its index. How can I get its index with the DOM API? A: You can use querySelector() to select the first a.container element. Then you can get its first child (the h1 element) using querySelector(). Finally you can remove the h1 from its parent and then from the parent of its parent, etc., using the parentNode property of the Node object. const href = "; const h1 = document.querySelector('a.container h1'); const h1Wrapper = h1.parentNode; const h1WrapperParent = h1.parentNode.parentNode; console.log(h1Wrapper); console.log(h1Wrapper.parentNode); console.log(h1WrapperParent);
