In the past, much thought has been given to the possibility of developing fluorescent lighting in which the light emitted is converted to a lower intensity light of a longer duration, which is more effective to the human eye. In order to convert a fluorescent lamp into a type of lighting in which the perceived color temperature of the light produced is lower, some further efforts have been made. One such method which has been proposed is to remove the glass envelope of the fluorescent lamp to provide an opening through which a light source may shine into the interior of the lamp, and in the interest of maintaining a long life, a fluorescent disk may be placed within the opening. An example of such a lighting unit is shown in U.S. Pat. No. 3,323,656 granted Apr. 19, 1967 to J. B. Steffler et al. While this approach has been used with some success, it is limited in that the light source itself must be placed in close proximity to the fluorescent disk, and thereby a short length of fluorescent tube within the lamp is sacrificed. In order to alleviate some of these problems, a fluorescent lamp assembly in which the fluorescent tube is disposed in a tube member, is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,487,073 granted Dec. 11, 1984 to N. C. Yamazaki et al. While this approach may be said to have overcome the problem of the short fluorescent tube, the fluorescent tube is still disposed in the path of the light from the light source.

Thus, there is still a short length of fluorescent tube which is sacrificed to provide the desired length of fluorescent tube within the lamp,
