Dosimetry of (99m)Tc-ECD in brain SPECT after failure of aneurysmal subarachnoid hemorrhage treatment with hyperbaric oxygen. We studied the effect of treatment with hyperbaric oxygen (HBO) on the redistribution of (99m)Tc-ECD in patients with aneurysmal subarachnoid hemorrhage (SAH). (99m)Tc-ECD brain SPECT was performed twice, before and after HBO treatment, and regional cerebral blood flow (rCBF) was measured. Posttreatment rCBF was lower in both affected and unaffected regions than pre-treatment rCBF in all patients with successful treatment. Posttreatment rCBF in unaffected regions was not increased in any of the patients. Posttreatment rCBF was lower than pre-treatment rCBF in the affected regions of two patients who failed treatment with HBO. Therefore, we assumed that rCBF in the affected region might be low even before the hemorrhage. The rCBF decreased in the affected regions, in addition to being small in size, in patients with SAH and high intracerebral hemorrhage volume. In those patients, successful HBO treatment failed to induce further rCBF improvement in the affected regions. Q: Why would another module act up? I'm having a small problem. I'm a noob to programming, and I'm working on a simple RPG game in Unity. I have a module called LevelTrigger, and when LevelTrigger loads, it makes a call to PlayerTriggered to check whether it should stay on or off. Here's the code: using System; using System.Collections; using System.Collections.Generic; using UnityEngine; public class PlayerTriggered : MonoBehaviour { public GameObject Player; public bool On; void Start() { } public void LevelTrigger_On() { On = true
